

Contributors

Adele Anderson is a mentor at SUNY Empire State College's Genesee Valley Center in Cultural Studies. She has professional experience as an independent consultant, compliance analyst, and program evaluator in health and human services. Her research interests also include globalization and development in the Americas, and cultural studies encompassing corporate responsibility, attraction-based marketplaces, and tourism.

Kevin Brennan, an international programs and financial consultant based in southern Vermont, is the former Director of African Programs for the School for International Training, and has worked with the United Nations, the Africa-America Institute, the University of North Carolina, and other organizations and institutions. Mr. Brennan has lived and worked in Lesotho, Kenya, South Africa, and Uganda, and traveled extensively throughout Africa.

Jennifer Coffman is assistant professor of anthropology at James Madison University and also teaches courses in African and African American Studies. Her teaching and research interests include cultural anthropology and ethnography, political ecology, development and environmentalism, post-colonialism, Africa, and anthropology of education. She and co-author Kevin Brennan helped establish a summer program in Kenya in 1995 for The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Jennifer organized and led James Madison University's first summer study abroad program to Kenya in May, 2003.

John Engle is the co-founder of the American University Center of Provence and maître de conférences and tenured faculty at the Université de Toulon et du Var. He has written extensively on international education, and has taught at UCLA, Occidental College, Illinois Wesleyan University and the Université de Provence

Lilli Engle is the co-founder and Director of the American Center of Provence and President of International Cultural Services. She serves as a member of the Board of Directors of Experiment in International Living (France) and is former president of the home exchange network, HomeLink International.

Patricia Farrell is an evaluation specialist at the University of Michigan's Department of Agriculture and Natural Resources Education and Communication Systems Center for Evaluative Studies. Her area of expertise is adult learning, assessments, evaluation, and using technology to provide structural support for academic staff.

Christina Isabelli García is an assistant professor in the Department of Hispanic Studies at Illinois Wesleyan University, where she teaches courses in second language acquisition, Hispanic linguistics, and history of the Spanish language. Her research interests include the relation between social networks and the linguistic and oral communication development of university study abroad students.

Patti McGill Peterson is executive director of the Council for International Exchange of Scholars (CIES) and vice president of the Institute of International Education (IIE). She is former President of Wells College and of Saint Lawrence University.

Mark Ritchie is the director of the International Sustainable Development Studies Institute, an initiative of Kalamazoo College, based in Chiang Mai, Thailand. He has been Kalamazoo College Thailand program's resident director for the last five years, having lived and worked in Thailand off and on since 1989. While a Ph.D. student at University of California Berkeley, he received a Fulbright scholarship to study the impact of development on Northern Thai villages. In addition to teaching in and leading study abroad programs, he is active in program evaluation and assessment for international development organizations throughout Asia.

Leslie Root, a Gulf Coast-based clinical psychologist now in private practice, is former director of the Posttraumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) Clinical Team at the Veteran's Affairs' Gulf Coast Health Care System in Gulfport, Mississippi. She is an expert in the assessment and treatment of war-related PTSD.

Raymond Scurfield is an associate professor of Social Work at the University of Southern Mississippi. He has a distinguished national and international record as a PTSD clinician/manager and an innovative therapy and program developer. Other areas of expertise include race-based trauma, family and peer-group therapy, outreach, and community-based mental health.

Murari Suvedi is Assistant Dean of International Studies and Programs at Michigan State University, where he is associate professor of extension education at the Department of Agriculture and Natural Resource Education and Communication Systems, and coordinates the Center for Evaluative Studies.

J. Scott Van Der Meid is the Director of Study Abroad at Brandeis University. He serves on the advisory boards for the SECUSSA Committee on Under-representation in Education Abroad; the Rainbow Special Interest Group; and the SECUSSA Data Collection Working Group. He serves on the Advisory Council for the Forum on Education Abroad and as the chair of the Forum's Data Committee.

Andrew Wiest is professor of history at the University of Southern Mississippi, a specialist in military history and Modern British history. He serves as Deputy Director of USM's British Studies Program and Coordinator of the Faculty Exchange with Sandhurst.