

Hannah Arem graduated from Cornell University in 2006 and is now a student at the Johns Hopkins School of Public Health in the department of International Health. She continues her work with the Foundation for International Medical Relief of Children as Project Manager for El Salvador

Sophia Balakian graduated from Cornell University in 2006. She works at Facing History and Ourselves, an international non-profit organization that develops curriculum and trains teachers in the areas of genocide and human rights histories, social justice, and tolerance.

Demetri Blanas graduated from Columbia University in 2006, and he has been working in Southeastern Senegal since September 2007. He started a non-profit organization there together with a Senegalese doctor, and recently learned that a number of their projects have received funding from a French NGO.

Jason Nossiter graduated from the University of California, Santa Bar-bara, and now works as an analyst for a small investment bank in San Francisco. His research helps structure financing programs, raise seed capital and provide strategic advice for early stage companies in the consumer products, food and beverage and media industries.

Neal Sobania is the Executive Director of the Wang Center for International Programs at Pacific Lutheran University and Professor of History.

Bernhard Streitwieser is the Associate Director of the Study Abroad Office at Northwestern University and lectures in the School of Education and Social Policy and the German Department.